

The apparition advanced, and so did I. Horror gave me courage, and I grappled with it. I held it in a firm, unshrinking grasp, and found that it was solid as a thing of flesh and blood, and that it moaned and trembled. "If in terror," should I call for aid? The thing, living or dead, had killed my poor young friend. No fevered imagination conjured up the form and face which he believed was of another world.
